

TEAM 31 GAME IDEAS

Out of Context and Mission Mix-Up

Draft prepared by Surtaj Singh - 2 August 2026

I put these two ideas together based on what we discussed in the meeting. Both are designed as simple browser games for 3-8 people, with short rounds and no sign-up required.

I also made a basic clickable demo for each idea so the team can see how the lobby, gameplay and results could look.

The two ideas

- Out of Context - a short guessing and bluffing game based on funny questions and answers.
- Mission Mix-Up - a cooperative game where players use private clues to put actions in the right order.

1. Out of Context

PLAYERS 3-8	TIME 8-15 minutes	STYLE Guessing and bluffing	GOAL Finish with the most points
-----------------------	-----------------------------	---------------------------------------	--

Basic idea

Each player answers a private question. The answer is then sent to another player, who writes a believable fake question for it. At the end, everyone sees the real question mixed with the fake ones and tries to pick the original.

How a round works

- 1 Each player receives a different private question and writes a short answer.
- 2 The answer is sent to another player without showing the original question.
- 3 That player writes a fake question that could reasonably match the answer.
- 4 The real and fake questions are shuffled together.
- 5 Everyone votes for the question they think was the original.
- 6 The answer is revealed, points are added and the next round begins.

Example

Real question	What was the strangest reason your team could not access the internet?
Answer	Because the Wi-Fi password was written on a banana.
Fake question	Why was the new employee unable to join the meeting?

Scoring

- 2 points for choosing the real question.
- 1 point each time another player votes for your fake question.
- An optional bonus point for the funniest question and answer combination.

Why it could work

- The rules are quick to explain and the game does not need drawing, acting or specialist knowledge.
- Most of the funny content comes from the players, so the rounds should feel different each time.
- It can use general prompts, office-friendly prompts or other themed packs later.

Out of Context - Basic Demo Screens

These screenshots show the basic screens I made for the idea and how one round could move from the lobby to the results.

Lobby and game introduction

Writing a fake question

Voting for the original question

Round result and scoreboard

2. Mission Mix-Up

PLAYERS 3-8	TIME 10-20 minutes	STYLE Cooperative planning	GOAL Build the best action order
-----------------------	------------------------------	--------------------------------------	--

Basic idea

The group receives a situation and a list of actions. Each player gets one private clue, so nobody has the full answer on their own. The group discusses the clues and puts the actions in order before the timer ends. A surprise event can change the plan during the round.

How a mission works

- 1 The game shows a mission, such as an internet failure before a client presentation.
- 2 Every player receives one private clue that helps decide the correct order.
- 3 Players explain what their clue means without showing the clue itself.
- 4 The team takes turns moving the action cards.
- 5 A surprise event may appear and force the group to change part of the plan.
- 6 The team locks the final order and the game explains the correct solution.

Example mission

Situation	The client presentation starts in five minutes, but the office internet has failed.
Actions	Inform the client, check another device, prepare a hotspot, restart the router and test the presentation link.
Private clue	The client should be informed before any equipment is restarted.

Scoring

- Points for actions placed in the correct position.
- Partial points when important before-and-after relationships are correct.
- A small time bonus when the team submits a correct plan early.

Why it could work

- It gives the group a cooperative game rather than making every round fully competitive.
- Every player has useful information, which gives everyone a reason to take part.
- The same basic layout can be reused for different office, general or silly scenarios.

Mission Mix-Up - Basic Demo Screens

These screenshots show the basic screens I made for the idea and how one round could move from the lobby to the results.

Lobby and game introduction

Mission and private clue

Shared action board

Team result and explanation